EDITORIAL

It is with pleasure that we present the current issue of Azhagu. As before, it gives a panoramic view of the significant happenings on the campus.

The reports on a number of seminars, symposia, conferences, workshops, training programmes and awareness campaigns organized by all the Faculties of the University proclaim the earnest endeavours of the staff and the financial support extended by the University and the funding agencies, especially the University Grants Commission, to attain the goal of excellence in academic pursuits and research programmes.

The most noteworthy feature of this period is the visit of a host of renowned professors and erudite scholars from abroad under the scheme “Inviting Foreign Professors”. These distinguished scholars not only delivered a series of lectures to the post graduate students and researchers but also participated in the meetings of the Broad Based Boards of Studies and suggested modifications and improvements to update the syllabi to the level of international standard. Thanks to these different programmes, almost all the Faculties in the University reaped the benefits.

Towards the realisation of the fore-sighted vision of the Hon'ble Chief Minister of Tamil Nadu, Alagappa University has established a Skill Development Centre with the objective of offering short-term skill-based vocational courses / programmes for indigenous skilled labour to take to self-employment.

Every year the University rededicates itself to be worthy of being a potential centre for research in the educational map of India.

FACULTY OF ARTS

Department of English and Foreign Languages

Special Lecture on "Transitions in English Language Teaching"

A special lecture on "Transitions in English Language Teaching" was organized by the Department of English and Foreign Languages on February 7th, 2013. Dr S. Subbiah, Professor and Head, welcomed the gathering and introduced the distinguished speaker Dr. I. Julius Sundaraj, Professor of English, Thofar University, Oman who delivered a scintillating lecture on the topic. The speaker, elaborating on the new developments in the teaching of English, stated that the modern language laboratories would help the teachers to teach this much-sought after international language to the first generation students in India. The modern language laboratories include Cubicle System, CALL, Multimedia Language Lab, Smart Classroom, Project Based Learning and Blogs. While using modern language laboratories, the teachers of English experience the challenges and problems like lack of expertise in using computer technologies, lack of technical support, digital divide, time constraints; the speaker hoped that these could be overcome with proper training and improved facilities. He concluded his speech by suggesting some software for language laboratories. Dr. P. Madhan, Assistant Professor, proposed a vote of thanks.

Guest Lecture on Victorian Era

A guest lecture on the great literary artists of the Victorian Era was delivered by Prof. A. Ayyasamy, Retired Professor of English, on the afternoon of 22nd March 2013. At the outset of his lecture, the speaker highlighted the historical background of the Victorian era. He said it was an age of peace, prosperity and plenty. Due to Industrial Revolution the country became “the workshop of the world”. The economic expansion resulted in rapid changes. The major inventions of steam power and the telephone, an efficient postal service and colonial expansion added to the prosperity of the nation. The age was characterized by optimism but beneath the public optimism and positivism, it was a century of paradoxes and uncertainties. New scientific theories revolutionized Victorian thinking. They tried to reconcile religious dogma and scientific truth and thus it was an age of compromise. The literature too flourished but it reflected all these concerns. Of all the genres, the novel became popular with the reading public and it was the novelists rather than the poets who became the literary representatives of the age. Charles Dickens, George Eliot, Benjamin Disraeli and Thomas Hardy contributed immensely to the glory of the English novel. Among the significant poets of the age, Alfred Tennyson was the most representative of his age; Matthew Arnold, reflected the mood of his age and Robert Browning with his optimum was the most popular poet. Macaulay, Carlyle, Ruskin, Arnold and Newman were remarkable non-fictional prose writers and they contributed to the richness of Victorian literature.

Guest Lecture on the Mind and Art of Shakespeare

Dr. Mustafir Rahman, Eminent Professor of English and former Vice-Chancellor of People's University, Dacca, Bangladesh, delivered a series of Special Lectures at the Department of English & Foreign Languages, Alagappa University, from 18th March to 22nd March 2013. In his First Lecture, the distinguished speaker focused on the mind and art of Shakespeare. According to the speaker, the plays of Shakespeare are vehicles of wisdom. The substance of his works came out of the unfathomable depths of his oceanic mind. His keen observation and “negative capability” supplied him with life-like dramatis personae, who are admired and adored as immortal creations by generations of readers. His insight into human nature is “impeccably true” and in delineation of human passions Shakespeare has exhibited the same fidelity to truth. Shakespeare's signal adherence to the great Law of Nature that all opposites tend to attract and temper each other has contributed to his world-wide popularity. Equally facile over the comic and the tragic, Shakespeare has scored over all other English writers. In short, Shakespeare is an inexhaustible fountain of thoughts and sentiments. He speaks on matters which will be the concern of every one at every age. The speaker concluded his speech by referring to the dramatic romances that show Shakespeare's deep insight into the concept of freedom and the Christian virtues of atonement, forgiveness, reconciliation and reunion.

Special Lecture on Feminism

Under the aegis of the Department of English and Foreign Languages, a Special Lecture on Feminism was delivered by Dr.I.R. Meera Rao, Professor & Co-ordinator, Department of P.G. Studies in English, Maharani's Arts and Commerce College, Mysore, on 08.07.2013 Tracing the growth and development of Feminism as a literary and critical concept, the distinguished speaker referred to the pioneering efforts of John Kelly and John Stuart Mill in defending the women's struggle for equality. After them, she said, it was Mary Wollstonecraft, who crusaded for the emancipation of women. Devoting her entire life and energies to protest against institutions that crushed women's identity, Wollstonecraft attacked the gender-based men construction of false scholarly pleas protecting patriarchy. Virginia Woolf gave expression to the submerged agonies of the wounded self of a woman in a male-dominated society. The speaker added that Elaine Showalter, Kate

Millet, Julia Kristeva, Toril Moi and a host of other writers gave a new perception of realities focusing on the society's wrong treatment of women. Modern literary critics have been scrutinizing major literary works and characters from the feminist point of view
